DEALING WITH STRATEGIES TO BREAK IMPENETRABLE CUSTODY

The FCVFC has repeatedly met protective parents whose children are “legally” isolated by authorities, under the total control of their abuser. Attempts to provide a voice to the victims through legal counsel may be equally thwarted where counsel is weak and ineffective. If children are allowed to speak in an in camera interview, if the judge does not take action on their testimony, there is no intervention, this is another example of legal impenetrability through isolation “No Cause of Action, No Standing to Sue” is a statement of legal standing that halts too many protective parents and their representatives. The inability to pry children from the hands of a known abuser, where clear and convincing evidence is repeatedly repressed and suppressed by the court is an experience of consequences worthy of many doctoral dissertation studies.

The FCVFC has been aggressively studying, pursuing interventions and the elements of intervention that lead to successful release of children from their “Predator In Possession”.

Our guest, Brook Altman is a participant in the “Impenetrable Project” of the Legal Strategy Research Litigation Support program of the FCVFC and her “Brave New World” approach to tackling the massive institutional malfeasance of the family court system in Manhattan has taken incredible courage and nerves of steel.
